This is a unique program, the first of its kind in the United States. Despite being early movers here in the U.S., we are far behind the development in the FinTech area in China and Europe. There is an urgent need to develop talent in this critical area.

FinTech is an area that is of increasing importance in the Orlando area and in industry in general.

[The technology policy expert Alec Ross noted recently that] if land was the raw material of the agricultural age; iron was the raw material of the industrial age; data is the raw material of the information age. Information is the resource of the future.
Few innovations have the potential to improve the lives of billions of unbanked worldwide as FinTech.

In today’s highly competitive business world, Financial Technology is reshaping the financial services industry at a remarkable pace. The FinTech MS program will empower its participants to better understand and address the changes and challenges within the industry.

FinTech is the next big milestone in the evolution of Finance. UCF’s FinTech program can help students not only navigate the changing landscape of finance but also pioneer them.
